

Section III

AMOS Documentation

How to Obtain AMOS Documentation

Our primary channels for distributing AMOS documentation are electronic media. We use the periodic AlphaCD and our Web site on the Internet. You can view the electronic documents and make your own printed copies if desired, but only for your personal use. A complete list of available documents and their latest revision level is available at either of these primary channels.

We also offer documentation in printed form. Contact the Sales Order Administration department for documentation pricing.

When you need to acquire a document, there are several advantages to using electronic channels. With suitable equipment, electronic documents are available practically instantaneously and at nominal cost. Electronic documents may also be more timely, since revisions can be incorporated sooner than in print.

AMOS Documents on the Web

To obtain a document from the Web—free—proceed as follows:

1. Go to the Alpha Micro AMOS On Line home page at <http://www.amos-online.com>
2. On this web page, go to the “Topic” drop down box on the left and select “Support”.
3. On the “Page” box just below the Topic box, select “Documentation”.
4. On the Online Documentation page, scroll down to find the title of the desired document.
5. Click on the title to view the document.

Document Revision Level

Depending on the nature of a particular change, the electronic version of a document may be updated before the printed version is updated. The reason is that when a minor change is made, only the electronic version of the document will be changed. The revision level of the electronic document will be raised, the same as for any other change. The printed version, however, will not be updated—and its revision level will not change—until our stock of printed copies is depleted. Check the electronic version to make sure you’re looking at the latest information.

Exception: large changes, or corrections to critical errors, will still be handled immediately, in print as well as electronically. In such cases we will make new masters, print new copies, and discard all stocked copies of the old version as soon as possible.